A QUEER FIND.

A Petrified Pony Discovered By Cowboys on the Plains.

Cowbeys on the Plains.

H. Clay Emmet, a young cowboy who passed through Beltoc. Tex., the other night, reports a singular find made by him during a cattle hunting raid recently. The find was nothing more or less than a petrilied pony, standing erect and complete in all its parts. Emmet says that he and his partner B. C. Woodville, were chiling across the prairie late one afternoon when their tired ponies neighed and whinnled as if they were aware of the presence of another animal.

Looking around, they discovered what they thought was a broncho tethered to a nesquite which crowned the summit of mcsquite which crowned the summit of a little knoll to the northward. They found that the horse was fastened by a chain, but slood so rigidly still and seamed altogether so mysterious that their own horses reared and plunged as it in fright. Finally they dismounted and found that the pony was petrified not a hair or a hoof amiss. Emmet says that some ranchman years ago must have chained the poor horse there, leaving him to starve upon the plains. As the ribs of the animal are plainly visible in the petrification and he seems to have been otherwise much emaciated this is most probably the case. Emmet will arrange to have the strange ind exhibited in some museum.—Philadelphia Times.
